Neighbors Safeguard the Neighborhood During ACL

While the hot, dry summer had already heightened concerns about wildfires, the Bastrop and Steiner Ranch fires that started Labor Day weekend brought the subject home for Barton Hills residents.

On Sept. 5, with the ACL Festival just a few weeks away, the discussion on the neighborhood listserv about how to help prevent a fire in the Greenbelt took a more urgent tone. A plan took shape and within a week, a sign stating the dangerous conditions in the Greenbelt was designed, approved and sent to the printer. By Sept. 13, those signs were planted at every official and unofficial entrance to the Greenbelt, KXAN had picked up the story and C3 Presents (ACL Fest organizers) wanted to use our signs. In addition to raising fire awareness, the signs show how neighbors can pull together and quickly create something that really works.

Many were involved in the creation of the Barton Hills fire sign and it would be impossible to list them all. Thanks go out to Kay Killen, Melissa Hawthorne, Nina Miller, Miriam Joffe and others who took the initiative, and shared ideas and strategies with everyone through the listserv.

President's message

Living in the Cultural Center of the Universe

By Craig Smith

President, Barton Hills Neighborhood Association

Here in the heart of Austin, bordered roughly by Barton Springs Road and South Lamar Boulevard, near Barton Springs, Zilker Park and the Barton Creek Greenbelt, our neighborhood always has a rich cultural offering to enjoy. Live music of all types, theater, film, visual arts, restaurants, gardens, athletics and natural areas are all within walking distance of our homes. It would be hard to find a neighborhood in any city that is so convenient to so much that people enjoy doing.

A few times a year, it seems that we have become the cultural center of the universe, when thousands of people from all parts of the world are walking our streets, filling our familiar stores and restaurants and, of course, endlessly searching our streets for a parking space. The recent weekend of the Austin City Limits Music Festival was such a time.

For three days, the world's attention was on what was happening here. Not for a dreadful reason — like the fires that preceded the event or the drought that continued after it — but for the happy reason that hundreds of artists were performing their music in Zilker Park and tens of thousands of fans were enjoying it, along with some of the best food, art and crafts that Austin has to offer.

There were bound to be some problems, but most were minor. After having 10 years to perfect their act, the producers of the ACL Festival seem to have learned how to handle their crowds and avoid most of the problems they cause for the surrounding neighborhoods, such as Barton Hills. While there were undoubtedly some unruly fans, litter, blocked driveways and other inconveniences, these were minor detractions from the positive overall benefit that the festival had for Austin and our neighborhood.

I think it is blessing to live in a community where many individuals are struggling to create something new, call it art and offer it up to the public for enjoyment. Even if we do not like it, we should respect the courage that it takes to create it. And if we have to put up with traffic and crowds of strangers a few times a year to be part of that experience, we should think of it as a small price to pay for living in the cultural center of the universe.

Fire Safety Starts at Home

3 things you can do now

One of the great things about our neighborhood is its proximity to the Barton Creek Greenbelt. While this unique wildspace is usually a source of pride, the current drought has also made it a source of concern. The wildfires in Oak Hill, Steiner Ranch and Bastrop are stark reminders of the devastating power a stray spark can unleash.

Even if your home doesn't back up to the Greenbelt, you're not out of the woods when it comes to fire. Any home within a 1-mile radius of a natural area is in what's called the Ember Zone, and is at risk of fire from wind-blown embers.

Unless we start getting significant amounts of rain soon, the threat of fire will continue to be something we all need to actively guard against. Three things you can do to help protect your home, family and community are:

1. Clear dry brush from around your home. This helps create a defensible space and gives firefighters a leg up when battling a fire, whether you're near or far from the Greenbelt. It also gives a fire that much less fuel to burn. For more information about small and large brush pick up, enter "yard trimmings" in the search box on the City of Austin website (www.ci.austin.tx.us).
2. Take steps make your home more fire resistant. Closing spaces where embers could lodge, gather and ignite is the name of the game. Blocking spaces between your roof decking and covering, clearing dead leaves and debris from your gutters, and covering vent openings with 1/8-inch or finer metal mesh are just a few of the things you can do to keep flying embers out.
3. Have a plan. Knowing where you can go and what you should take with you is a good idea in the face of any evacuation or disaster situation. The American Red Cross website (www.redcross.org) provides a list of items to include in a disaster preparedness kit in their Preparing and Getting Trained section.

For more information about creating a defensible space, making your home more resistant to fire, and being prepared for fire and other natural disasters, download the "Ready, Set, Go" personal wildfire action plan from www.bartonhills.org.

The Barton Hills Neighborhood Association has formed a disaster preparedness subcommittee to help our community prevent these unfortunate events in the first place, and be prepared to deal with them should they occur. For more information about the committee, contact Patricia Wilson at pwilson@mail.utexas.edu.

Preparedness Trainer to Speak at Neighborhood Meeting

During the Oct. 18 neighborhood meeting, a Disaster Ready Austin trainer from the City of Austin's Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Management will talk to us about personal disaster preparedness. During the one-hour presentation, you'll ...

- Learn how to make an emergency supply kit.
- Find out what needs to be included in a family emergency plan.
- Hear about the types of emergencies that happen in our area.
- Discover ways to help neighbors and get involved in community efforts.

Free waterproof grab-and-go document bags will also be available at the meeting.

Help Your Trees Survive the Season

By Leah Golden

While many of us are breathing sighs of relief now that summer's heat is subsiding, one group of residents may still need help weathering this extended dry season.

"Even though [trees] may hold their leaves and look like they're doing fine ... if they didn't make enough energy through this year's growing season, they may not come back next spring," says Keith Brown, board certified master arborist and owner of Austin Tree Experts.

Brown suggests three things to help make the most of your watering.

1. Check your soil depth. The best way to water a tree depends on the depth of your dirt, according to Brown. Trees in shallow soils (2-inches of dirt or less before you hit limestone) require more frequent, but shorter waterings — maybe a half-inch three times a week. Trees in deeper soils don't need to be watered as frequently, but can handle more volume, either the standard 2-inches every two weeks, or 1-inch per week.

2. Water full circle. The best place to put all that water is the area from the tree trunk out to the tips of its branches, also known as the drip line. "A lot of people confuse that with just doing a ring of water around the outside edge of the tree," Brown says. "What you really want to do is cover that entire area in the middle, not just that little ring."

3. Retain water. Covering the ground around the tree with 3.5 inches to 4 inches of mulch can help maintain soil moisture, according to Brown. Mulch also absorbs water, so he suggests you place soaker hoses below the mulch, or increase your watering time.

Another spring

Fall in Texas is like a second spring, Brown says. Trees experience a significant amount of root growth at this time, so watering now through the end of November can help.

Cooler weather also means water won't evaporate as quickly. Brown suggests letting the soil dry between waterings to avoid drowning your tree.

You won't know how well your trees managed this summer until next year. Most native trees will finish putting on their foliage around mid-April, with pecan trees finishing a bit later. Hopefully, watering now will help your trees have a green spring.

Barton Hills Garden Club Helps Neighbors Grow Into a Community

By Leah Golden

When Bernice Billing and her family moved into their Barton Hills home in 1973, she only knew one person in the neighborhood.

That one person was Betty Brown, who also happened to be the Barton Hills Garden Club president. Bernice had a love of gardening from way back: Both her mother and grandmother were gardeners. Though she didn't have a lot of free time for gardening because her children were small, Bernice joined the club. Thirty-eight years later, she's still a member and still involved.

"You just meet so many nice people and I've made so many friends. If I didn't belong to the garden club I would have never met a lot of these people," Bernice says.

That's a sentiment echoed by other garden club members, as well. Christy Kuehn, who joined the club in 1984, says meeting new people was one of the best things that came with her membership.

"You learn a lot, but more importantly, you connected with people you would not run into in your everyday life. I liked that aspect of joining," Christy says.

The garden club was founded in 1960 by Donia Heath, Thelma Woods and Dorothy Sanders. At the time, club membership was limited to 75 — and there was a waiting list to join, according to Mary Campbell, a former club president and current parliamentarian.

Today, as in the past, the club's monthly meetings feature expert speakers on gardening topics. Jo Ruffcorn, who joined the club about 10 years ago, says she's learned how to address some of the challenges of gardening in Barton Hills.

"What I enjoy is that they have had a lot of really wonderful speakers at the monthly meetings that have given me the opportunity to learn more about how to better take care of my trees and flowers," Jo says. "I've learned how to better use what is available for our area."

The club provides members with a mix of social activities and informational meetings. It also lends its support to different beautification projects and garden organizations.

Christy says even with a 40-hour-a-week job, she still rejoins the club every year. While there are many opportunities to get involved in different projects, you can tailor your involvement to fit your schedule.

"You're not obligated to come to every meeting," Jo laughs. "Come to the ones you'd like to."

Interested in the Garden Club?

The club meets monthly between September and May, at the Austin Area Garden Center at the Zilker Botanical Garden. The next meeting is Tuesday, Oct. 25, starting with coffee at 9:30 a.m. The program starts between 10 and 10:30, and the featured topic is daylilies.

If you'd like to get involved in the Barton Hills Garden Club, contact Sharon Harris, the club's membership chair, at 443-1181. Dues are $20 per year and your membership includes two tickets to the Zilker Garden Festival in March.

How $1 Can Make Your Doors Virtually Kick-Proof

From John Luther Neighborhood Watch

For $1 and about 10 minutes of your time, you can make any door in your home with a dead bolt virtually impossible for a burglar to kick in. Replacing the ordinary screws in the striker plate of your dead bolt locks with a set of low-cost 3-inch screws can enhance your home's security.

No home is completely burglar proof. However, fortifying your dead bolt locks is one of the things you can do to delay entry and deter all but the most determined burglar. And it's a task that most do-it-yourselfers can accomplish with ease.

Anatomy of a dead bolt

Dead bolts have a metal bolt that slides from the door into a drilled hole in the doorframe, which is covered by a metal plate called the striker plate.

The dead bolt lock itself is generally strong. The striker plate, however, is held over the drilled hole by two screws that are only long enough to penetrate the soft wood doorframe. This is the weak link in an otherwise strong security device. If the door is kicked, the doorframe can shatter inward. The door swings open and the dead bolt is defeated.

A low-cost solution

To solve the problem the two short screws are replaced with #8 by 3-inch long screws that will go through the striker plate, through the soft wood doorframe and into the wall stud on the other side of the doorframe. These screws are available at any home improvement store.

This adds great strength to the door when the dead bolt is locked. The doorframe will no longer shatter when the door is kicked and can withstand repeated kicks by a would-be intruder.

To check the screws you currently have, simply remove one of the screws from your dead bolt's striker plate and measure it. If it's not 3-inches long, it needs replacement. An electric drill with a Phillips screwdriver tip is recommended for this job. The threads on the longer screws should also be lubri-cated before installation by rubbing the threads along a bar of bath soap to lessen resistance to entering the wall stud.

Help is available

As a service to the neighborhood, one of our Neighborhood Watch patrol members can assist you in inspecting your locks and doors. They will even provide the proper screws and help replace them (just reimburse them for the screws). Since January, we've replaced more than 100 sets of striker plate screws. We hope anyone who needs assistance will contact John Luther at jluther@austin.rr.com.

Greenbelt Guardians Report

Volunteers get a raise, invasives get the boot

By Glee Ingram

Greenbelt Guardians Coordinator

On Sept. 24, we celebrated National Public Lands Day by working at two of our adopted trailheads, Homedale and Gus Fruh. We worked in collaboration with other groups coordinated through the Austin Parks Foundation: Central Texas Mountaineers, Austin Ridgeriders and Texas Trail Tamers. A total of 61 volunteers worked at both sites, contributing 183 work hours. Recently, volunteers "got a raise" in the value the City of Austin assigns to their work, from $10.60 an hour to $21.36 an hour! At that new rate, our Greenbelt Guardians contributed a value of $3,908.88 to our Greenbelt.

At the Gus Fruh trail, we continued work on a rock wall erosion-control project near the swimming hole. We also had invasives removal teams working along the main trail across the creek.

At Homedale, we did minor trail edging work, cut dry overgrown grass along the entry trail, and cleared some rock-strewn sections of the switchback trail. Our emphasis was the removal of drying Nandina and large Ligustrum near the edge of the rock flats area, plus the clearing of large dried logs on the woodlands floor.

The strategy was to cut down the dried trees and take them across the creek to the Spyglass area trail, where dried wood was being assembled for chipper work. The effort was two for one: It removed invasive plants and reduced the fire hazard near the rock flats where people frequently camp.

I want to thank the following people
